When the boys' basketball team visited Cambridge on February 28, it was its first opportunity in seventeen years to win the Suburban League championship outright. The Tigers did not squander their chance, as they shook off a sluggish first quarter to defeat the second-place Cantabs, 59-47, for the title. The Tigers finished 17-5, tying the school record for victories. They were ranked in the state's top ten and qualified for the state tournament for the first time since 1974. Any dreams of a state championship, however, ended in the South Sectional quarterfinals, when Boston English stopped North in an overtime thriller.

On these pages is presented a sampling of some of the artwork which I created during the first half of my senior year at NNHS. Contained is work done both in and out of class, in the mediums with which I am (or was at the time) most comfortable.

As I have a great love for subjects of a fantasy nature, I felt it was fitting to incorporate this love into my drawings and paintings. I had first begun with a desire to illustrate comic books, but slowly found that there are great limitations to this form of art. Presently, I would like to illustrate book covers and the like.

Most of these works are relatively small — I generally work on eight by eleven inch paper (usually in pencil) — but in the near future I plan to go to much larger sizes, hopefully eventually working in oils on large canvases.

Next year I will attend Bard College in New York. I will major in art, and perhaps take some courses in art education. It is very possible that I will attend a graduate school immediately following this, to receive more specialized instruction.

I have always enjoyed drawing since my early youth and practically taught myself some basic skills. Every year I draw many pictures and learn many new techniques. In my sophomore year I took Art Minor which involved some drawing, but that is as far as I went in the academic side of art; most of what I do goes on in my own room. I hope to use my skills in art professionally to some extent in my future.

City weighs HVAC request

by Jonathan Goodman and Ben Marglin

If the city approves funding, repairs to the heating ventilation and air conditioning system will be complete this summer, building department mechanical engineer Tom Hayes said.

The school department's request to mayor Theodore Mann and the aldermen is for $118,000, Hayes said.

According to Mann, the city hopes that it can fund the repairs.

"We have always had a commitment to school building maintenance, and we would like to continue this commitment," he said.

Monday, the Finance Committee was to have decided whether to send the proposal to the full Board of Aldermen. Facilities Committee chairman George Mansfield said. His committee passed the request Monday, Nov. 9.

This phase of HVAC work began in October, 1986 after students and faculty complained that the temperature differs from room to room, teacher liaison to the building department Montgomery Wells said.

The building department has begun to refurbish 125 unit ventilators, and to take surveys of air conditioning systems, costing and planning, Wells said.

Installation of the unit ventilators will be in all classrooms that have at least one exterior wall, Wells said.

Leonhardt, Inc. of Brookline, an HVAC contractor, has just completed its survey of the air conditioning systems for the athletic offices, teaching offices, house offices and lunch room, Hayes said.

Leonhardt will submit the building department in estimating the cost of refurbishing the HVAC system, Hayes said.

Head custodian Mike Massaro said that all these adjustments should help the HVAC system considerably. "It should be more uniform," he said. "These changes will certainly be an improvement."

Other work the system needs includes repairing and replacing the exhaust fans and unit ventilators on the roof, Massaro said.

Also, the air flow in the HVAC system has to be regulated, according to Massaro and Wells.

"What has to be done is still in the design stage," Massaro said.

"Repairs to the HVAC system are progressing according to schedule," Hayes said. "When all these refurbishments are completed, we will have a satisfactory HVAC system."

Hayes said members of the school committee who find problems with changes in the building should contact Massaro.

Interhouse seeks adviser, plans fair

by Donna Rubin

If Interhouse Council has an adviser, the group will coordinate Harvestfair Friday, Nov. 13.

Principal Marya Levenson said that unless there is an adviser, there will be no Harvestfair.

"As we search for an adviser, we're simultaneously planning Harvestfair," co-president Alison Rosenthal said.

The fair, which is a fundraiser for clubs as well as an activity for all students, would start at 1:35 and continue after school in the cafeteria as a finale to Tiger Pride Week, according to Interhouse Council co-president Jay Burke, a senior.

"Last year there were about 10 clubs selling goods at Harvestfair, but we want even more this year," Burke said.

As the group comprised of representatives from North's student organizations, Interhouse coordinates Harvestfair.

Rosenthal, also a senior, said the council is urging clubs to be creative in what they sell.

"We hope that clubs will sell artwork, raffle tickets, t-shirts and other things as well as food," Rosenthal said.

To have a booth, organizations must register with Interhouse. Club representatives must tell the council what they will sell at the fair. To sponsor a booth clubs must pay $10, $5 of which is a deposit that is refunded if the area around the booth is cleaned up, Rosenthal said.

According to Rosenthal, a student band or the Sisters will perform.

To allow school to end by 1:35, Thursday and Friday's schedules may be interchanged, or the blocks may each be shortened, Burke said.

Senior runs 117 miles to help his dad

by Bill Collins

For his father and others who suffer from a rare muscle disease, a senior ran 117 miles this summer.

When Zito raised $17,000 in his 117-mile run from Portland, Me., to Boston Garden to help pay for an operation for his father Angelo.

Mr. Zito, who has had torticollis for 17 years, said the operation is still in the experimental stages. If he decides not to have the operation, the money will go to help others with the disease, he said.

"This could be the first bit of hope we've had since my father has had torticollis," Brian said. "I was so happy when I finished the run to know that I had made it and that the money would be there for my father and others with the disease."

Mr. Zito said that Brian's dedication to the fundraising run demonstrated love and humanitarianism.

"As I watched him near the finish line, I thought, I'm going to put my arms around him and tell him how much I love him," Mr. Zito said.

"I saw my teen-age son running almost 120 miles to help people. It brought tears to my eyes."

When Brian told his father about the idea last year, Mr. Zito said he had thought, "No way." Mr. Zito said he didn't think Brian would be able to do it because he has epilepsy.

"He not only brought new hope to those who suffer from torticollis, but also to people with epilepsy by showing them he could run 117 miles."

Brian said he trained last winter doing distance running and workouts.

He has also run cross-country for three years, indoor track for one year and outdoor track for two years.

Describing the run, Brian said his muscles were often sore and he sometimes didn't feel well.

"But the cause drove me on," he said. "I'd tell myself to keep going, keep trying, for my dad."

Brian's three brothers bicycled alongside as he ran, having notified radio and television stations to raise public awareness about the run and the disease.

"We received 300 donations from New England and a few from the Midwest," Brian said. "It's been incredible to see how many people are willing to help."

There were about 75 relatives and friends at the finish line, as well as Chemists 4, 5 and 7 and the Associated Press.

"It really got around the country," Brian said.

Mr. Zito said there is a possibility of a future fundraising campaign.

"The boys always have something up their sleeve, so you never can tell what's on their minds," he said.

While organizing the fundraising run, the Zito family received phone calls from many people who were relieved to find other people with the same disease.

"I talked to a lot of people who thought they were the only ones with torticollis, and they were thinking about suicide," Mr. Zito said. "We began to form somewhat of a support group."

wanted to receive comment on the possibilities for this year until she had more opportunity to discuss them.

The Career Focus Program will run as it always has, according to counseling department head Linda Shapiro, who co-chairs the Career Focus Committee with tech-voc department head Pat Nicolas. The program will differ from last year's Intercession in that students will be required to attend their regular classes when not at presentations, Shapiro said.

"There will be about four speakers scheduled during every block," Shapiro said. "Full classes may attend presentations. Upperclassmen may also use their ticket booklets as an individual basis to attend presentations during their free blocks."

"Students will be limited on to the total number of presentations they may attend using their tickets."

Shapiro said the Career Focus Program will function as a break between the two semesters, providing the faculty with extra time to correct papers and classes and calculate grades.

Last year's Intercession was an all-school On Campus program focusing on The Right to Be Different. The faculty's Human Rights Committee and the student group Ethical for Equality cooperated to organize the program, which included more than 30 presentations as well as an average of about 25 in-class discussions per block.

Dan Kusler, Human Rights Committee chair, said Intercession was a demonstration of what can be done when the school and community share common goals and is willing to cooperate and participate.

"Human rights has been a central focus and a high priority to the school since Intercession," Kusler said.

The Human Rights Committee has been sponsoring an On Campus program this week about celebrating differences.

Presentations scheduled include discussions about gay rights, the physically disabled, foreigners and castaways.

"Thoughtprints, the school art and literary magazine, is completely student-run, student-produced, composed of students' submissions, and dependent on money from sales of previous issues. Like the Newtonite, we have our own homeroom/headquarters in room 336-3. I guess you could say our discussions at meetings are "spirited" or "lively".

"I'm very proud of this year's Thoughtprints. We've invented new ideas, carried on old traditions, and had a great time in the process. Thanks to everyone who supported us by buying a copy — in the year 2000, you'll be glad you did, because a 12-year-old Thoughtprints tastes infinitely better than a 12-year-old meatloaf."
